

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A system and method for migrating data, in parallel, from a source database system into a target database system includes storing data in groups (e.g., clusters) in the source database system. The groups of data are transferred, in parallel, to respective temporary staging tables in the target database system. The data in the temporary staging tables are then inserted, in parallel, into a target table in the target database system to complete the migration.

5